

High-density low-temperature resistant distribution boxes available in stock

Article Overview

For low-temperature applications, Delvalle Box and Meyer Tool offer distribution boxes capable of operating in extreme cold, with Delvalle suitable down to -40°C and Meyer Tool cryogenic boxes down to -253°C .

Available Options

1. Delvalle Box – Extreme Temperature Electrical Cabinets Delvalle manufactures electrical cabinets designed for low-temperature environments down to -40°C , with short-term exposure tolerances up to -60°C . These enclosures are suitable for high-density installations such as telecommunications racks, fiber optics, CCTV, and telemetry systems. They are available in IP43 to IP66 ratings, ensuring protection against dust and water ingress, and are engineered for both high humidity and very dry conditions. Delvalle offers customization and engineering support to optimize the cabinet for your specific project requirements . 2. Meyer Tool – Cryogenic Distribution Boxes For applications requiring ultra-low temperatures, Meyer Tool provides custom cryogenic cold boxes capable of maintaining thermal integrity below -253°C (-425°F). These vacuum-insulated enclosures are designed for precise gas routing and cryogenic fluid distribution, making them ideal for scientific research, quantum computing, and industrial cryogenics. They feature multi-line distribution, vacuum-jacketed piping, and ASME-certified fabrication, ensuring high reliability and efficiency in extreme cold environments .
