

Steel Fireproof Cable Tray Manufacturing

Article Overview

Steel fireproof cable trays are manufactured through a multi-step process involving steel skeleton formation, fireproof panel production, coating application, and rigorous quality control to ensure fire resistance and structural integrity.

1. Steel Skeleton Production

The process begins with high-quality cold-rolled steel sheets, which are cut to precise dimensions using laser cutting or punching equipment to ensure uniformity and minimize waste. The steel is then formed into the tray's structural skeleton using roll forming machines for ladder-type, perforated, or solid-bottom trays, and press brakes for bends, flanges, and mounting brackets. The finished steel skeleton must have a smooth, defect-free surface, with no burrs, cracks, or irregular edges, ensuring high load-bearing capacity and long service life.

2. Fireproof Panel Production

Fireproof panels are made from siliceous and calcareous materials, combined with fibers, lightweight aggregates, adhesives, and chemical additives in precise ratios. These panels are produced using advanced autoclaving technology, which enhances their fire resistance, strength, and durability. The panels are designed to integrate seamlessly with the steel skeleton, providing a protective barrier that prevents flame spread in case of fire.

3. Fireproof Coating Application...
